Learn about Food Access and Health

A healthy community provides a readily available, affordable, and abundant selection of healthful eating options through conveniently located fresh produce markets, grocery stores, farmers' markets and community gardens. The presence and access to neighborhood grocery stores and markets encourage higher fruit and vegetable consumption, which supports dietary needs and helps reduce the risk of many diseases.

Melissa Martin, Public Health program manager, Ann Foster, Food Systems Council/Farmers Markets; Zena Edwards, WSU Extension; and Nina Davenport, Area Agency on Aging and Disabilities will discuss our local food system and the importance of having access to healthy food.
